foreword

WE used to speak of the "twentieth" as being "Canada's Century". It is now nearly half over and, while we have made phenominal advances, they are mostly on the material side.

In no other country in the world has there been such wide disparity between economic and cultural development. As we assume our honoured place among the United Nations we may find that it will enhance our good name if we are known as a land where the arts are esteemed and encouraged. In Canada to-day there are more artists working, more art students in the schools and more people taking an interest in art than ever before.

Slowly there is being established in Canada an intelligent and tolerant attitude towards the arts. Confidence in the artists' integrity, whether the painting is traditional or experimental in the field of abstract design, is necessary if our artists are to keep abreast of the times.

Our responsibility as an art society in so far as our knowledge goes is to exhibit only works that are seriously and conscientiously produced, works by young and perhaps little known artists and by artists who have been an influence in creating whatever distinction art in Canada possesses to-day.

The Canadian Group of Painters has a membership of artists from all over Canada, a number of invited contributors taking part in all our exhibitions.
